EDITOR'S NOTE

Annales Sectio Linguistica was originally a yearbook of Eötvös Loránd University (ELTE), under the full title of Annales Universitatis Scientiarum Budapestinensis de Rolando Eötvös Nominatae, Sectio Linguistica. It formed part of a collection of university yearbooks in various disciplines, and served the purpose of making the results of ELTE-based research in linguistics available to an international audience beyond the iron curtain. The first volume of the yearbook appeared in 1970, and a total of 26 volumes were published by 2005. From 1990, financial problems hindered year-by-year appearance.

During the whole period, Annales was edited by Prof. István Szathmári. The articles were written in a variety of languages including English, German, French, Latin, Russian, Spanish, and others. Thematically, they covered the most diverse fields of research on a wide range of languages.

The journal now re-appears with new editorial and advisory boards, and under very different circumstances. Annales Sectio Linguistica continues as a peer reviewed journal published yearly by Tinta Könyvkiadó with the intellectual support of Eötvös Loránd University. The new journal's focus is on the functional description of Hungarian, and its preferred language is English.

The editorial board is grateful to Prof. István Szathmári for decades of work as an editor, and to all former colleagues for their contributions to the journal.

The present issue has been supported by grant K 43768 of OTKA (Hungarian Scientific Research Fund).
